GOMAN DISCRIPTION

The Goman live a peaceful existence in a magic rich world. They mold their environment like a sculptor molds clay. Magnificent and beautiful spires that seem to defy physics (because it does) mark their cities.

Physically, they are large and strong with the average Goman being 2.13 meters tall and 180 kg. They have a naturally high endurance, but a low dexterity and agility when compared to humans. The Goman are bipedal with two arms and legs, but that's where the similarities to humans stop. On their legs, arms and lower torso, they have thickened skin with what looks like thick coarse hair. They have an elongated jaw with flat molar like teeth. And they have great powerful wings that allow them access to their skyward, stair-less towers. They are stout in appearance, but surprisingly quick.

Mentally, they are extremely creative with barely enough raw processing power to be sapient. They will likely never be space faring, if left to their own devices. The have neither the will or the competence for exploration. Why would they? They control their reality, literally sculpting with their minds the environment they want out of the raw dirt.

Psychologically, they are a model for stability and mental health. They are, on average, more open and willing to cooperate than the average human. They are highly resistant to neurosis and mental breakdowns. The only chink in their mental armor is a lack of organization. This, however, is probably due to more of inability in their reason rather than a pure disorderly disposition.
