

MIKE JACOBSON BACKSTORY

Mike Jacobson was a high school gymnast of some repute. He was an alternative for the US Olympic team and then he broke his leg. More precisely, he landed poorly after attempting a Shewfelt and tore most of the ligaments in his right knee. Since the injury, he has parlayed his regional fame into a steady job as a baker at a small bakery in Soho. He lives in a closet of an apartment, but he's making it. Aside from the occasional person recognizing him, which is becoming rare, he easily blends into the crowd.

However, his injury healed long ago and, do to his uncharted traits, completely. He viewed his injury as a get out of jail free card. No more coaches, no more early mornings and no more thick-headed, over competitive, self-centered jocks. There's real travesty in the world, being off a tenth of a point is not the end of the fucking world. Mike is happier being one of the crowd and keeping his distance from others. Those that do know him, know him to be thoughtful, kind and a homebody.

Physically, Mike is on the shorter side, but very well built. He is inexplicably heavy and is able to absorb amazing amounts of physical punishment. When he does get hurt, he heals quickly. He doesn't get sick often either, not even a cold.

Mentally, Mike is sharp. He's no savant or anything, but he's sharp. He's finished high school and has a couple quarters of community college under his belt. He has a good, general knowledge of the world and his place in it.

Psychologically, he is a nice, kind, introvert who is genuinely concerned about others and the state of the world. He isn't often asked for his opinion and doesn't offer it openly. When someone wants to talk, however, that someone will find a couple nuggets of gold in that mine.

His superpower is teleportation. He hasn't taken the time to develop it much, it's just been something he could rely on to get out of a jam.
